

THINK THEY SAW PIRATE CRAFT

Anyway, It Was Long, Low and Rakish, and Looked as if It Had a Dead Man's Chest and a Bottle of Rum Below Decks.

WOMAN ON BOARD, AND THEY SAY SHE SWORE, TOO.

Members of Hudson Boat Club Saw Mysterious Yacht, and Yonkers Police Have Weather Eyes Peeled for Him.

Yachtsmen along the Hudson, in the vicinity of the stamping ground for the thieves who have been looting summer homes, think they got a sight of the head of burglars who have been cleaning up thousands of dollars by daring robberies. A mysterious and rakish yacht was seen last night in the Hudson, and the party on board answers to the description of the men and women who are looking for.

Rowboats and small launches have disappeared from several of the Hudson boat clubs of late, and this, coupled with the other robberies in the suburban towns, has led the police to believe that it is the work of the same organized gang. Last night John Baner and Joseph Larkin, of the Hudson Boat Club, near Yonkers, missed their launch, in scanning the river they saw the mysterious yacht.

Capt. Tom Williamson and Dr. White, of the same club, also saw the craft and said parties on board.

The yacht was in command of a hard-looking man. There was another man, a boy and a woman aboard. All were using profane language and conducting themselves in a manner suggesting a vicious use of liquor. The boatmen saw the faces of those on board and feel sure that they are the thieves. An attempt was made to land the yacht in the cove where the water is shallow, but the party on the yacht were warned that they could not come within the cove. The Yonkers police have been notified of the "rakish" looking craft.

PICTURE IN WORLD RESTORES SON

A picture in The Evening World was the means of restoring James Francis Keenan, eleven years old, to his parents after he had been detained at Police Headquarters and with the Children's Society for three days.

James was picked up on Monday night at Vesey street and West Broadway. He said his parents had moved to New York, but he did not know the address. He had left his home in Brooklyn to find them.

A story of the boy's adventures, together with a picture made by an Evening World artist, fell into the hands of Thomas Keenan, a younger brother, who ran to his mother with it. There were tears of joy and the mother's eyes as she looked at the picture and read of her boy's whereabouts. For two months she had not slept, and her husband had treated the streets of Brooklyn seeking the lost one.

The father and mother found James at the office of the Children's Society.
